

Lisa Yee

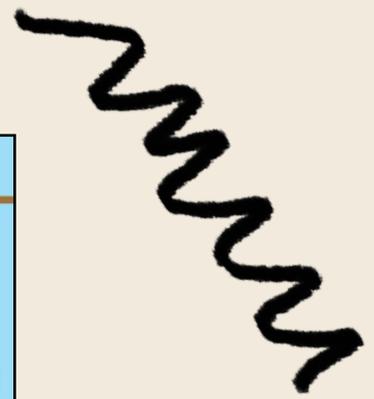

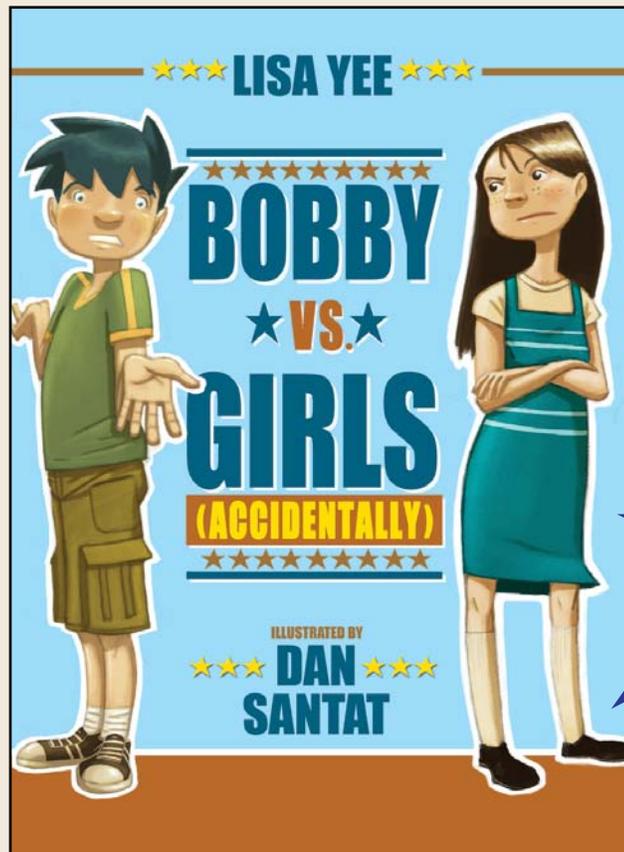

Lisa Yee has always loved to read. During her high school years in Los Angeles, she would sometimes ditch class and sneak off to the library. (Okay, so she never quite figured out the juvenile delinquent thing.) She decided to be a writer when she was in the fifth grade, and she studied English literature in college. Lisa later became the co-owner and creative director of Magic Pencil Studios, a strategic creative company, where she did everything from writing restaurant menus and TV specials to leading creativity seminars for dairy farmers.

With the publication of Millicent Min, Girl Genius, Lisa realized her lifelong dream of becoming an author. The book won the prestigious Sid Fleischman Humor Award and has over 400,000 copies in print. It was followed by Stanford Wong Flunks Big-Time and So Totally Emily Ebers—two novels featuring the same characters during the same time period as Millicent Min, but written from completely different points of view. Lisa has also written a novel for teen readers, Absolutely Maybe, and the first book in a new chapter-book series, Bobby vs. Girls (Accidentally).

Lisa Yee currently lives in South Pasadena, California, with her husband, two children, and a rambunctious dog. Bobby vs. Girls (Accidentally)

Bobby Ellis-Chan has a really big secret: his best friend is a girl. But now that they're in fourth grade, all of a sudden Holly is hanging with the other girls, wearing new clothes, straightening her hair, even laughing at Bobby. Bobby has to get his revenge—by running against her in the election for fourth-grade school representative.

- ★ “The story of how Bobby and Holly lose and then rediscover their friendship is told with plenty of Yee’s trademark humor....Both boys and girls will find much to relate to here.”
—The Horn Book Magazine, starred review

“Yee really understands children’s thought processes....Totally believable.”—Kirkus Reviews
